Introduction

This study was commissioned by the Centre for Contemporary Theatre at Birkbeck, University of London, and the Jerwood Space. It is a revision of an earlier study, which I conducted on behalf of Birkbeck in 2013. The intention of the study is to provide a snapshot of the size, cost and quality of rehearsal spaces available in London in the summer of 2016.

This survey is primarily intended as a resource for theatre-makers and producers, especially those in the early period of their careers. In my capacity as Artistic Director of Upstart Theatre, I've rehearsed shows in spaces ranging from the back rooms of pubs and actors' living rooms, to professionally-appointed spaces used by national companies. Rehearsal space is a very substantial part of a small-scale production budget, and in a time of increased rents in London in general, this cost is only getting higher. I hope that the information contained in this study will give theatre makers and producers the information necessary to plan their budgets accordingly.

Methodology

This survey was primarily conducted between 31 May and 3 June 2016. Data was gathered through a combination of visiting rehearsal rooms' websites, email and telephone contact. The main sources for the data were the Spotlight Contacts 2016 publication and the previous 2013 study. Some venues were added because staff at other venues recommended them.

The data was collected in an Excel spreadsheet, which makes up the other element of this report. Calculations were run on the cost of each rehearsal space listed on an hourly, daily and weekly basis. Additionally, a calculation was run on the cost of each space per square meter, again on an hourly, daily and weekly basis.

Different venues advertise their pricing in different ways. Some offer prices per hour, others per day or per week; other venues offer all three prices. In order to compare all the rehearsal spaces in the data set, I have run calculations to generate daily, hourly, and weekly prices where these were not given. In the Excel spreadsheet, prices provided by the venue are highlighted in green while prices I have calculated are highlighted in yellow. The methodology behind these calculations is outlined below.

Example A

Rehearsal space A provides an hourly price on its website of £15 including VAT. In order to generate a day rate, I multiply the hourly price by 8, giving us a day rate of £120. In order to achieve a weekly rate, I multiply the daily rate by 5, for a rate of £600.

Example B

Rehearsal space B only provides a weekly rate. In order to achieve a daily rate, I divide the weekly rate by 5. In order to obtain an hourly rate, I divide the day rate by 8.

Week length

Some venues offer different weekly hire rates. For purposes of this comparison, I have used the rate for Monday-Friday five-day weeks wherever this has been provided.

Note

Inclusion in this study does not represent endorsement by any of the following: the report's author, Tom Mansfield; its commissioners, Birkbeck, University of London and the Jerwood Space; or their employees or partners.

Participation and research

While aiming to be as comprehensive as possible, this study does not claim to be a guide to every single theatre rehearsal space available in London. A number of organisations did not provide information, either specifically declining to have their information in the survey, or by not returning requests for information. This may be a product of overstretch or may represent a conscious decision not to make their costings publically available. Other organisations asked to give their information anonymously. They have been included in the spreadsheet but not in the ordered lists in this document.

Theatre makers and producers are therefore reminded that this is a non-exhaustive list and that other spaces are available. Spotlight's Contacts 2016 is still the most comprehensive listing of available spaces.

Exclusions

In a departure from the 2013 survey, I have excluded any spaces that offer hire on a day-by-day basis only. This decision is predicated on the assumption that the majority of productions will rehearse on a full-time basis, on Monday to Friday daytimes.

I have also tended to exclude educational organizations, unless they have specifically stated that they have space available during term times.

Casting suites, film studios and band rehearsal rooms also occasionally list in Contacts; these have been excluded as not being appropriate for theatre rehearsal.

Findings

In compiling this report, I've been struck by the level of increase in the cost of spaces since the 2013 report. The average cost of renting a rehearsal space across a week has gone from £1,048.89 in 2013 to £1,261.75 in 2016, which, as many theatre professionals working in London will recognise, reflects the very substantial rate of increase in renting other kinds of space in London.

Additionally, it's important to note that many spaces have shut down since the 2013 study. These have tended to be smaller organisations which provided rehearsal space alongside other community services. One example is Expressions Studios in Kentish Town, which according to The Kentish Towner blog is in the process of being redeveloped into flats.

It's worth noting that other organisations have opened since spring 2013, the redeveloped Diorama Studios being a notable example for emerging companies.

At this time of increased prices, it's even more important that venues offer subsidies to emerging companies. The Jerwood Space (due disclosure: they are one of the funders of this report) have a long-established programme of subsidies for emerging theatre companies. Other organisations, such as Brixton Community Base, offer substantially reduced hire rates to registered charities. While subsidy and artist development lie outside the remit of this study, it's heartening to note many more organisations offering subsidised rehearsals space as part of an artist development strategy – the New Diorama's recently published 2016 Artist Development Programme is a very good example of this.
